

Although today is filled with sadness at our mutual loss and follows many months of grief at Alan's decline in health, we ask that you now join us in celebrating what Alan was to each of us through his life.

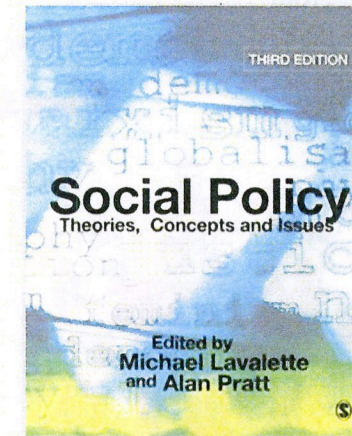

A wonderful son and younger brother, with a passion for education and sport.

A man of great dignity, style and stature, who despite his exceptional intellect was the kindest and most compassionate of men.

A Principal Lecturer and author, who had a passion for social policy and a great skill at public speaking which we are certain everyone present witnessed (whether they liked it or not).

A loving and fiercely loyal husband, father, grandfather and friend.
